Über À bras-le-corps

About

Der Anfang...

Wir wollten weg vom üblichen Szenario einer Aufführung mit ihren Sitzreihen und der Bühne, weit weg von unserer Studentenzeit. Wir wollten in einem geschlossenen Raum ein geräumiges Viereck aus Stühlen aufstellen, das unsere Bewegungen klar begrenzt und gleichzeitig jede Distanz zwischen den Zuschauer_innen und uns sowie jede Möglichkeit der Flucht auf beiden Seiten aufhebt. Eine Choreografie, die sich aus einem Gefühl der Müdigkeit komponiert; eine Masse, die mit Mühe einem grausamen Tod entgegen kriecht und sich immer wieder, provisorisch und ohne Unterlass erneuert. Hitze und Fallen vermischen; wie man mit Worten spielt.

Im Laufe der Zeit wurde À bras-le-corps von jeglichem poetischen und theoretischen Arsenal befreit; es bleiben ein paar Notate zu unseren Intentionen, oder archivierte Presseartikel und Fotos – und wir beide haben eine Unmenge von anderen Arbeiten in Angriff genommen – man denke ehler an „Ausbeutung“ denn an „Arbeit“. Nachdem sich der Staub gelegt hat, scheint unsere Energie von dem Verlangen nach Kraft und Masse geprägt, aber auch von einer lebendigen, freudvollen Ironie, wobei die Choreografie mehr und mehr einer einfachen und explosiven Erfahrung Platz macht.

À bras-le-corps als erste Arbeit hielt für uns ein erstaunliches und immer wieder erneuertes Versprechen. Der strikte Rahmen passt sich unserer Entwicklung und unserem Reifungsprozess an. Wir bringen unsere Erfahrungen als Performer und als Männer ein und erhalten daraus emotionale Ströme, die von der Struktur des Duets wie von einer Überlaufrinne aufgefangen werden. Aufgrund seiner Verfasstheit konnte sich das Projekt an jede Umgebung anpassen, vom Dominikanerkloster zum Gemeindehaus, von der Turnhalle bis zu prestigeträchtigen oder einfachen Proszeniumsbühnen - und ebenso mit jeder Oberfläche arbeiten: Ob Parkett, Holz oder rauer Beton, ob Steinplatten, schwarzes oder weißes Linoleum oder sogar einfacher Erdboden. Die Geschichte dieses fortwährenden Anfangs hat für uns etwas Episches ...

EN

The beginning...

We wanted to perform far from the normal context of a performance, with the rows of seats and the stage, and also far from our student days. We wanted to install in a closed space a large square of chairs strictly delimiting our movement, abolishing by the same gesture all distance between the audience and ourselves, abolishing any possibility of an escape by one or the other. Everything had to lend itself to our approach: a choreography composed from a sensation of fatigue, a mass crawling with difficulty to a cruel death, restarting again without cease, provisional. Heat and falling mingled, to make death in the same way one plays on words: from the tip of the lips.

But, with time, À bras-le-corps got rid of all its poetical and theoretical arsenal; it remains, at the very most, a few notes of intentions, archived press clippings and photographs - and both of us have frontally attacked a lot of other work - “exploits” rather than “labors”. After the dust has settled, our energy appears marked by the desire for power and mass, but also by a lively and joyful irony, the choreography giving precedence to a simple and explosive experience.

À bras-le-corps, as a first work, held staggering and renewed promise for us. The strict framework adapts itself to our evolution/maturation, and the piece increasingly resembles the concept of clearing the fields: bringing to it our experiences as performers and as men, taking from it the emotive fluxes that the structure of the duet welcomes like the spillway of a dam. By its nature, the project has been able to adapt to every environment, from a Dominican convent to a village assembly hall, from a gymnasium to a prestigious or banal proscenium - and to strike against every surface: wood floors, rough concrete, slabs of stone, black or white linoleum, and even simple countryside earth. The past of this continuing beginning has for us something of an epic....

Press Excerpts

Dominique Frétard, Le Monde, May 1 1994

It could have been a simple struggle of insolently-healthy boys - but feet slipping unexpectedly, the nonchalance of wrists, breathless shouts, the stubborn desire to go to the limit of their resistance and the violin of Paganini's Caprices are each elements that add to the strangeness and emotion of this virile achievement. The audience, placed close enough around the dancers to touch them, miss nothing of their efforts: sweat running down, the redness of skin battered against the floor, the oppressed breath, the fugitive fragility of a regard, the softness of a hand...

Marie-Christine Vernay, Libération, May 2 1994

In a voluntarily-reduced stage space, a ground-level boxing ring surrounded by spectators, the two much-too-big dancers have no other preoccupation than to lay bare their dancing, and their pleasure, by putting to the test their complicity. Not devoid of humour, if only in the constraint of the too-narrow scenic space or in the orchestrated darkness of Paganini's music.

Marie-Christine Vernay, Le Monde Rhône-Alpes, Sept 16 1993

À bras-le-corps, born from a delicate complicity, isn't at all flashy. Created in 1992 for the salon of La Villa Gillet, the duet has preserved its intimate character. The bet has paid off because it's based on a voluntary choice, a real commitment. There's no possibility that these two artists would put on kid gloves or make concessions. All their artistic ideas are straightforward, without that aesthetic preoccupation that eclipses the philosophical aim, and vice-versa. A first work, their piece has the density of an intimate journal, with its clumsiness, its trial and error, but also with its disturbing sincerity and its imposing singularity.

Mary Brennan, The Herald, August 18 1999

The dance itself is astonishing: made when Charmatz and Chamblas were still in their teens, the energetic tumbling and scragging have - seven years later - taken on a new dimension. The need not to give in has a different poignancy, just as the intense physicality of their solos and encounters is now much more, and much more complex than lads flexing muscles, though, in truth, the innate sophistication of this piece reminds you how able and precocious their talents were, and are.

Donald Hutera, The Times, August 19 1999

What followed was 30 minutes of body rolls, handsprings, space-eating lunges and leaps into sudden darkness, punctuated by intermittent bursts of a furious Paganini violin solo. Charmatz and Chamblas might have been two attractive young men on an intensely private training course. Their muscular activities swung between competition and co-operation. The pace was likewise varied, with passages of strenuous, pouncing effort balanced against moments of respite. But the duo's heavy-breathing workout carried an emotional undertow. It was there in the way they pretzel-knotted around each other's waists or hauled each other's dead weight; in their clench-armed pugilistic spins and feigned throat-clutching death throes. Together they implied that the human spirit, like the body, is remarkably resilient.

DIMITRI CHAMBLAS

EN

Captivated by dance, Dimitri Chamblas joined the Paris Opera's celebrated dance school at the age of ten.

During his career, he collaborated with creators such as Jean-Paul Gaultier and Karl Lagerfeld, composer Heiner Goebbels, artists Christian Boltanski, Andy Goldsworthy Dan Caten, choreographers William Forsythe, Lil Buck, Mathilde Monnier, Benjamin Millepied among others.

In 1996, Chamblas created with Mathilde Monnier (director of the Centre National de la Danse in Paris until June 2019) the "research and writing residence", an occasion for artists to create personal creative space outside of the traditional production process.

Chamblas is co-founder of EDNA with dancer and choreographer Boris Charmatz. Together they have organized events, performances, exhibitions and published books. Their duet À bras-le-corps, has been performed in renowned theaters and festivals over the world. The duet is part of the repertory of Paris Opera ballet since 2017. In 2002, Chamblas started producing visual art works. He worked with brands such as Nike, Chanel, Jean-Paul Gaultier, Marc Jacobs, Van Cleef and Arpels, Dom Pérignon and Longchamp.

In 2013, as digital curator, Chamblas invented Mutant Stage with producer Amélie Couillaud: a series of 10 art films for the Fondation d'entreprise Galeries Lafayette designed by Rem Koolhaas.

In 2011 Chamblas and Benjamin Millepied began a film producing partnership, which remains active. Chamblas has also been consulted by Millepied to elaborate the Los Angeles Dance Project.

In 2014 he was nominated as artistic director at Paris Opera in charge of the 3rd Stage. In collaboration with Benjamin Millepied, he founded this creative digital platform by inviting artists such as Glen Keane, Xavier Veilhan, Bret Easton Ellis, Julien Préview, William Forsythe, Rubber Legz, United Visual Artists, Lil Buck, Barbara Hanigan, Jonas Kaufmann... to create original artworks inspired by Paris Opera.

Passionate by technological advances, in 2015 through a partnership with Google cultural institute, Dimitri Chamblas created the first immersive dance film, captured in 360-degree based on an original dance piece choreographed by Benjamin Millepied. In 2017 he launched Studio Dimitri Chamblas in Paris and Los Angeles, a structure that hosts all of his projects and collaborations, including a duet with star dancer Marie-Agnès Gillot, his participation in 10000 gestes by Boris Charmatz, or a creation with architect François Perrin for Performa New York.

In 2017 Chamblas becomes the new dean of dance at California Institute for the Art (CalArts) in Los Angeles.

In 2017 he started a duet with artist and musician Kim Gordon that they'll dance "3 times a year only but forever"...

BORIS CHARMATZ

EN

Dancer, choreographer Boris Charmatz subjects dance to formal constraints which redraw the field of possibilities. The stage is a notepad where to draft concentrated, organic concepts in order to observe the chemical reactions, intensities, and tensions engendered by their encounter.

Between 2009 and 2018 he was the director of Musée de la danse / Centre chorégraphique national de Rennes et de Bretagne. In January 2019 he launches Terrain, structure implemented in the Hauts-de-France region and associated with phénix Valenciennes, Opéra de Lille and Maison de la Culture d'Amiens. Boris Charmatz is accompanied artist of Charleroi danse (Belgium) during three years (2018-2021).

He is the author of a series of landmark shows, from Aatt enen tionon (1996) to infini (2019), in addition to his activity as a performer and improviser (in collaboration with Médéric Collignon, Anne Teresa De Keersmaeker, and Tino Sehgal).

As an associate artist of the 2011 edition of the Avignon Theatre Festival, Boris Charmatz creates enfant. Performed at the Cour d'Honneur at the Palais des Papes, the piece involves 26 children and 9 adult dancers. It was restaged at the Volksbühne in 2018 with a group of Berlin children. Invited to MoMA in 2013, Boris Charmatz stages Musée de la danse: Three Collective Gestures, a three-part program performed at the museum over the course of three weeks. Following an invitation in 2012, Boris Charmatz is once again hosted by Tate Modern in London in 2015, where he presents If Tate Modern was Musée de la danse? The show includes alternate versions of the choreographic projects À bras-le-corps; Levée des conflits; manger; Roman Photo; expo zéro; and 20 Dancers for the XX Century.

That same year, Boris Charmatz opens the dance season at the National Opera in Paris with 20 Dancers for the XX Century, and invites 20 dancers from the Ballet to perform twentieth-century soli and solo parts in public spaces at Palais Garnier. For the third time in Rennes, Boris Charmatz presents Fous de danse May 6, 2018, at the Esplanade Charles-de-Gaulle. The project is an open invitation to experience dance in all its forms and through all practices, from noon to 10PM. In 2017, this project tours to the Ateliers des Capucins (Brest), to the landing strip of the former Tempelhof airport (Volksbühne Berlin), and to Centquatre-Paris.

Charmatz is the author of several books, including Entretenir: à propos d'une danse contemporaine (Centre national de la danse / Les presses du réel, 2003), co-authored with Isabelle Launay; Je suis une école (Editions les Prairies Ordinaires, 2009), a work that retraces the adventure with Boca!; and Emails 2009–2010 (Les presses du réel, in partnership with the Musée de danse, 2013), co-authored with Jérôme Bel.
